Chance to network on the golf course

MT OMMANEY'S McLeod Country Golf Club will host its first business networking day on March 5.

For a cost of $15 per person participants will receive champagne and a group clinic from 4pm followed by networking, drinks and nibbles in the clubhouse.

Di Paez, who was recently elected the club's president, said business people did not have to be experienced golfers to participate.

"It's a fun, relaxed introductory clinic to the game of golf, giving participants a unique opportunity to network and meet other like-minded business people with whom to connect," she said.

"We find that it's easier to lose your inhibitions on a golf course and people can interact and network more freely than in your typical corporate meeting room or venue.

"The game and the golf course tend to relax people and allow them to tackle difficult topics in a more social environment."

Ms Paez said participants should wear smart casual attire rather than heels and skirts due to the clinic being held on the green.

"All equipment is provided so the only thing participants will be required to bring is a handful of business cards," she said.

McLeod Country Golf Club recently celebrated its 40th anniversary and remains the first and only golf club fully administered by women in Australia.
